

The International Index of Erectile Function Test (IIEF or IIEF-5)

This test, consisting of five questions, has evolved to be the standard for determining the severity of erectile dysfunction. To take the test, add your score for each of the five questions. The maximum score is twenty-five, the minimum five. The higher your score, the less the degree of erectile dysfunction. Typically, men with erectile dysfunction have an average score of about eleven, while men without erectile dysfunction usually score over twenty.

I suggest you record your current score and then come back to this test in six months or so, after you start a supplementation program. You may be pleasantly surprised.
